DESCRIPTION

The property is approximately 20,453 m² in size and fully developed. With a land-to-building ratio of 0.8 and a permitted building height of up to 17 m, the development plan allows for maximum utilisation of the site. As part of Harburg's innovation park, technology companies (green technologies, aviation/maritime, medical technology, digitalization, and materials science) could settle here, as well as knowledge-intensive manufacturing industries.

LOCATION

The commercial area is part of the Harburg Innovation Park and offers space for innovative companies from the following R&D fields: green technologies, aviation/maritime, medical technology as well as digitisation and materials sciences as cross-cutting fields. South of the location, the Elbcampus competence centre of the Hamburg Chamber of Crafts generates attention well beyond the district. Large-scale commercial facilities are located in the west.

CITY DISTRICT

Harburg, the southernmost district of Hamburg, offers urban flair, orchards in the Altes Land region, heathland as well as state-of-the-art container terminals in the port of Hamburg. Almost 176,868 people live in an area covering approx. 125 km² (as of 2023). With its settlement structure and transport connections, this district combines the benefits of a city of short distances with its favourable location in the heart of the Hamburg Metropolitan Region. All essential services and local amenities can be found in the Harburg city center and in the Phoenix-Center shopping centre. What is more, Harburg's inland port features one of Hamburg's largest urban development areas: over 150,000 m² of office space, residential units and hotels have been created here. With its unique mix of historic and contemporary architecture, the development in the centre of Harburg adds further to the district's attractiveness.

The Harburg district has large reserves of undeveloped land suitable for commercial and residential development and provides a convenient location with excellent transport infrastructure. With its port atmosphere and half-timbered houses, this district offers the opportunity to work in modern office or communications buildings with sophisticated architecture. The local business parks have an attractive design, providing flexibility and on-site services alongside a solid price/performance ratio. Harburg has successfully bridged the gap between science and business, and the results speak for themselves. As a business and science centre, the district benefits e.g. from the great potential of the Hamburg University of Technology (TUHH), numerous enterprises in its vicinity as well as the head offices of several large companies of strategic importance, such as Conti, Mercedes, SECO Northern Europe GmbH and Harburg-Freudenberger Maschinenbau GmbH.

Situated in a highly dynamic environment, Harburg is characterised by strong momentum and continued growth in the fields of research and technology, which is also thanks to private investors. The location offers excellent conditions for the transfer of knowledge between business and academia, e.g. through the local technology transfer company TUTECH of the Hamburg University of Technology (TU Hamburg), which serves as a scientific anchor institute. In Harburg, both new and established companies can draw on the expertise of a wide range of scientific establishments. A number of residential and hotel development projects as well as initiatives by private investors are currently accelerating Harburg's transformation into an innovative business district comprising well connected individual areas. All in all, Harburg offers excellent conditions for translating ideas into marketable products.
